■ About the Hakuho Japanese Language Research Fellowship Program

A Hakuho Foundation program that invites leading overseas researchers to Japan to advance research into the Japanese language and Japanese language instruction.

Overseas research into the Japanese language and Japanese language instruction not only deepens international understanding of Japan and the Japanese language, but also offers valuable hints to researchers working in the same fields in Japan.

The Hakuho Japanese Language Research Fellowship Program aims to enhance the fundamentals of research into the Japanese language and Japanese language instruction and to promote the deepening and practicalization of such research both in Japan and abroad by inviting leading international researchers to Japan to conduct residential research.

Please refer to the Foundation's website for information on previous invitees.
